Hand 3: (Non Hand Call)

In a DBL Board PLO hand, on the turn the pot is $525. A VIP, from OOP says all-in (he has about $1300). Dealer puts out all-in chip. PLO reg (IP) flips in 1 chip call. Some discussion from another player occurs that the bet on the turn is too much, but both players say nothing. River comes out and VIP wins both boards. PLO reg (IP player) says he only owes $525 because that is what the pot size was on the turn. Floor is called over and they rule action goes back to the turn where VIP bet $525 and is called. They re shuffle the deck and put out two new rivers. Action goes check/check and pot is split as new rivers make each player win on one board.

Bart discusses "accepted action" from the TDA rule book, explains another TDA rule involving players that move all-in leaving a hidden one chip behind then discusses a situation from 20 years ago on LATB where a player bet $5000 on flop and his opponent thought he called all-in not realizing that the betting player had $6000. They ran the turn and river twice and the calling player won on both boards. The betting player refused to pay the remaining $1000.
