From post --

" River is 8 of diamonds. A5K98 dd board and I have ATdd, I have the nuts. Player has roughly 1.7k behind. He ponders for a while and then checks. I act like I have a decision and then jam for his stack.

Dude goes into the tank. People start getting restless after the third minute, you can tell they are ready to call clock. He makes the motion to pitch in his cards a million times. He is so close to folding. I'm praying for a call so I start talking to him because I can tell he's fixated on folding. I ask him what do you have. You got the aces don't you? He smiles sheepishly and says that obvious huh? He then says sorry guys this is why im taking so long and he tables his 5 card hand face up that contains the AA like we didn't know lol.

Now I know his hand isn't dead when he tables his hand like this. But I act like I think his hand is dead and I go wow bro that's a disciplined fold. I then flash the 234 and let out a phewwww. He then goes I haven't folded yet, I can still make the call. The floor gets called over, i say to the floor this gentleman tabled his hand for everyone to see and would like to know if his hand is still live. The floor says yes. The player then makes the call and loses.

I tell this story to a few poker friends and get mixed responses. It's a game of deception. He could've deduced that I was fishing for a call. The guy got played. I'm ready to get bashed on by the people. Let's hear how scummy of a person I am. "
