

Why Trails Matter: Catching Up with Chuck Flink

By Cathy Corlett, Director of Strategic Communications and Trail Fund Director, American Trails

On a sunny fall morning, I sat down for a Zoom chat with Chuck Flink. Chuck is the original chair of American Trails, a landscape architect, and a professor at North Carolina State University in Raleigh, North Carolina. We talked about the landscape architecture profession, the state of the trails world, and what he has been up to since the March 2020 release of his book, The Greenway Imperative.

The National Recreation Trails (NRT) and National Water Trails (NWT) System

NRTs are existing land-based and water-based trails that provide close-to-home recreation opportunities on Federal, State, and local lands in all 50 states, the District of Columbia, and Puerto Rico. Over 1,300 of these trails have been designated throughout the nation.

NWTs are a subset of the NRT Program. The NWT System is a network of water trails open to the public to explore and enjoy. The system also serves as a community of water resource managers that benefit from information sharing and collaboration. Currently, 90 NWTs are listed in the NRT database hosted by American Trails.

Apply for designation! The deadline is November 1 of every year but prepare for next year. Find out more >>

Bridging the Urban-Rural Economic Divide

Urban and rural labels should not limit economic success. Expanding the definition of the "urban-rural divide" beyond population and density measures to account for economic interconnectedness can help develop effective economic development strategies. Failing to think beyond conventional notions of "urban" and "rural" could limit sustainable growth. Find out more >>
