The Business of Color: Amanda Williams, in conversation with Cheryl Durst, Illuminates Design's Impact on Purpose, Profit, Culture and the Future

Amanda Williams, Artist and Architect, AW Studio

Monday, June 8, 8AM

Presented by: IIDA

Amanda Williams is a visual artist, architect, and TEDtalk speaker. Williams blurs the distinction between art and architecture through work that employs color as a way of examining the complexities of race, place, and how value is assigned to space in cities. The landscape in which she and her creative practice, AW Studio, operate is the visual residue of the invisible policies and forces that impact most major US cities.

Williams is a member of the Obama Presidential Center's Museum Design Team and sits on the boards of the Graham Foundation, Garfield Park Conservatory and Hyde Park Art Center. She has been recognized as a Joan Mitchell Foundation grantee, a USA Ford Fellow, an Efroymsen Arts Fellow and a Leadership Greater Chicago Fellow.

Williams' installations, paintings and works on paper seek to inspire new ways of looking at the familiar, and in the process, raise questions about the state of urban space and citizenship in America. She has exhibited widely, including in the Venice Architecture Biennale, the MCA Chicago, and the Pulitzer Arts Foundation in St. Louis, and is in several permanent collections including the Art Institute of Chicago and the MoMA.

Amanda Williams in conversation with IIDA Executive Vice President and CEO, Cheryl S. Durst, Hon. FIIDA, will discuss design's impact on cities and share insights on the intersections of design that shaped her career.
